My favourite game LockOn Modern Air Combat

BioShock

From maker of System Shock, now Biological Shock...

August 31, 2007

Set in 1960, the player assumes the role of a plane crash survivor named Jack, who must explore the dystopian underwater city of Rapture and survive the mutated beings and mechanical drones within it. The game incorporates elements found in role-playing and survival horror games

The player collects weapons, health packs, and Plasmids that give him special powers such as telekinesis or electro-shock, while fighting off the deranged population of the underwater city of Rapture. The player at times will need to use stealth to slip by security cameras and foes, and can also hack into security stations to turn automated drones to his side.

The main resources in the game are ADAM, EVE, and Money. ADAM is used for character growth, EVE (which is similar to "mana" in fantasy RPGs) allows the use of Active Plasmids, and Money allows the purchase of special items and ammunition as well as bribing, or effectively 'buying off' security bots and turrets.

This game is kickass if using latest graphics Nvidia GForce 8800 Ultra and Intel Core processor, I've play the demo on Nvidia Gforce 6800 Ultra, 2GB DDR DRAM and Pentium 4 3GHz it still looks great!

NemoBar

Checkout your internet upload and download speed in real time

August 26, 2007

NemoBar (Network Monitoring Bar) is a handy utility to monitor internet traffic. Unlike other traffic monitors, NemoBar does not overlap any program windows.

Instead, it attaches itself to the Windows Taskbar like a second taskbar. It will show real time download and upload speed both graphically and numerically.

Best thing of all it's freeware!
